Independent Proxy Advisory Firm Glass Lewis Recommends that Ceragon Shareholders Vote for Change

Raises Concerns About Board's "Objectivity and Independence" and Questions its "Ability to Perform its Proper Oversight Role"

Recognizes Ceragon's track record of underperformance and questions standalone strategy

Affirms fair value of Aviat's acquisition proposal

AUSTIN, Texas – August 18, 2022 – Aviat Networks, Inc. (NASDAQ: AVNW) ("Aviat"), the leading expert in wireless transport solutions, today announced that independent proxy advisory firm Glass Lewis has recommended that shareholders of Ceragon Networks Ltd. (NASDAQ: CRNT) ("Ceragon") vote FOR the removal of three members of Ceragon's Board of Directors ("Board"), Yael Langer, Ira Palti, and David Ripstein, at the upcoming Extraordinary General Meeting of Shareholders on August 23, 2022. Glass Lewis also recommended that Ceragon shareholders vote FOR three of Aviat's highly-qualified, independent nominees, Paul Delson, Jonathan F. Foster, and Dennis Sadlowski.

In its August 17, 2022 report, Glass Lewis questioned the independence and objectivity of the three directors Aviat seeks to remove and questioned the motives behind their refusal to engage with Aviat:

- "We believe Aviat has identified valid concerns regarding the independence and objectivity of the current Ceragon board, which may explain the board's prickly response to Aviat's approaches and its refusal to more meaningfully engage with a prospective suitor."¹
- "We view such relationships [as those between Ceragon directors] as potentially creating conflicts for directors, as they may be forced to weigh their own interests in relation to shareholder interests when making board decisions."
- "We note further that three of the Company's seven directors are either affiliated with the Company or are insiders. We believe this raises further concerns about the objectivity and independence of the board and its ability to perform its proper oversight role."
- "Ultimately, we are concerned that these apparent conflicts may have manifested themselves in the board's recent evaluation of Aviat's acquisition proposal. In our view, given the ties and lengthy tenures of certain Ceragon directors, shareholders have less assurance that Aviat's proposal has received a full, fair and independent evaluation by a sufficiently independent board of directors. In that regard, we believe Aviat has provided evidence to establish sufficient concern that its advances may have been rebuffed by the Ceragon board for reasons other than what we consider are in the best interests of shareholders."
- "We believe there is suitable cause for investors to support Board change at this time."

In its report this week, Glass Lewis raised concerns about the Board's independence, noting "certain directors' past and current affiliations with Ceragon's founder and chairman, Mr. Zisapel...[including that] Ms. Langer and Mr. Ripstein [have] each served in various positions, including general counsel and CEO, respectively, at other Rad-Bynet group companies established by Mr. Zisapel."

Unfortunately, this is not the first time that Glass Lewis has expressed similar concerns. In its report issued in connection with Ceragon's 2021 Annual Meeting, Glass Lewis also raised its concerns about a lack of independence on the Board and recommended opposing the election of Ms. Langer, specifically citing "related party transactions between the Company and Mr. Zisapel's Rad-Bynet group." Since then, the Board has done nothing to address the apparent governance shortfalls, which have now cost shareholders dearly. It is time that the Board stop ignoring significant and valid concerns about governance and act with independence.

In its report, Glass Lewis called out Ceragon's track record of underperformance and unwillingness to change course due to the Board's lack of independence. The report also recognizes that Aviat's proposal offers a fair value for Ceragon and would likely provide more value to shareholders than the Company's standalone strategy:

- “Purely from a valuation perspective, we believe Aviat’s revised proposal is sufficiently within a range of fair value to warrant more serious, advanced and constructive discussions with respect to the proposal than it appears Ceragon has been willing to enter into to date. In our view, a more welcoming stance, good faith discussions regarding the potential benefits of a combination and the sharing of due diligence information could facilitate a reasonably acceptable outcome for all parties involved, possibly even resulting in an improvement in terms for Ceragon and its shareholders.”
- “During the five years preceding Aviat’s offer, Ceragon delivered a negative return of -16.4%, while Aviat generated a return of 180.8% and the other five peer companies delivered an average return of 63.3%. In just the last three years, Ceragon’s TSR was an even worse -30.1% and Aviat’s TSR was an even better 290.2%, while the other peers averaged a nil return over that period (Source: S&P Capital IQ). This analysis suggests that investors have consistently been unwilling to buy into value-creation narratives promulgated by Ceragon management and the board. We see little reason to expect this to change.”
- “Were Ceragon shareholders to hitch their wagons to Aviat, which Aviat’s proposal enables them to do via the stock component of the offered consideration, they might find themselves better off.”

Although Ceragon likes to claim that it is undervalued, Glass Lewis agrees with Aviat that “[analysts’] price targets are aspirational, particularly in light of Ceragon’s recent operational performance, other challenges and industry-wide supply chain issues.” Glass Lewis notes that it would not be unusual for Ceragon analysts to lower price targets following a meaningful decline in the Company’s trading price, as they have been shown to do in the past.

“Glass Lewis has validated our serious concern that Ceragon’s Board lacks independence and is therefore unable to fulfill its fiduciary duty to act in the best interests of all shareholders,” said Aviat President and CEO Peter Smith. “Furthermore, Glass Lewis recognizes that this lack of independence has led the Ceragon Board to fail in fully and objectively evaluating our proposal, which the report notes offers a fair value in light of Ceragon’s long history of underperformance.”

Mr. Smith added, “Both Glass Lewis and ISS have now recognized the conflicts that plague Ceragon’s Board. Given Ceragon’s anti-shareholder charter, if not removed next Tuesday, these same directors will not face reelection until 2024, despite their failure to negotiate a deal and continued poor performance at the Company. In fact, if not removed, these directors may become further emboldened to favor the interests of Mr. Zisapel and their own positions over the interests of shareholders. Shareholders can stand by and continue to allow this Board to shirk its responsibilities and oversee the woeful destruction of value, or they can push for Board change now and elect truly independent directors that will be motivated only by their fiduciary responsibility and explore all avenues to create value. We urge shareholders to vote FOR ALL FIVE of Aviat’s director nominees on the GOLD proxy card and remove the conflicted directors that continue to put their own interests first.”

YOUR VOTE IS CRUCIAL. For further information on how your vote FOR ALL FIVE Aviat’s director nominees can maximize shareholder value, please visit ValueForCeragon.com.
